What is a scholarship?

A scholarship is a financial merit-based award that a student must apply for. Awards may include housing allowances, course materials, tuition assistance, or learning aides such as laptops. Other awards may just cover part of the tuition cost. This is dependent on the terms and conditions of the scholarship itself and what it offers. Scholarships may be a one-time cash award, or a recurring award lasting for an academic year or for the duration of your degree course. However, it will always have conditions attached, and this will most likely relate to your grade point average.¹

Why apply for scholarships?

You may feel like it isn't worth it to apply for scholarship awards because of how competitive many of them are. But someone has to win, so why shouldn't it be you? Landing an award isn't easy but there are ways to improve your chances, especially if the scholarship you find is focused on criteria specific to your student profile. One of the most important steps once you find an award that interests you is to read the directions (pay attention especially to deadlines), qualifications (if you don't meet the criteria exactly, don't apply) and fine print carefully (an award you have to pay for to receive could be a scam). Attention to detail will also keep you from making minor mistakes that will send your application to the bottom of the judges' pile. Remember that there are scholarship opportunities out there for everyone, even if your strengths have nothing to do with academics.²

When should I apply?

According to the National Scholarship Database, nearly 60 percent of scholarship deadlines fall between the months of February and April, but we have many scholarship deadlines at the beginning of the school year. Students should always submit their scholarship information before the application deadline. Many organizations will not even glance at late arrivals when determining recipients of scholarship awards, so you could be out of luck if you're even a day late. Some applications may require you to put in some time but once you've completed an application or two, you might find it will get easier and take less time with each additional application. You may even find that you're able to use components of some applications for other scholarships, such as essays or personal statements.

How do I set my scholarship application apart?

Scholarship competitions receive applications from numerous deserving students each year. With so many students who deserve an award, how do they choose just one or a few winners? Perhaps the most basic scholarship application strategy is to apply for scholarships you have the best chance of winning. While this seems obvious enough on the surface, figuring out what these scholarships are does require some thought. After you've finished your scholarship search, you can begin narrowing down the list to awards you think you have the best chance of winning. Perhaps you're an excellent writer, you've had a truly unique experience, or you are fascinated with the subject of a scholarship competition. Whatever the reason, there are likely to be scholarships that stand out as awards for things you can do, and do well.

Beyond deciding which scholarships to apply for, you should play to your strengths in constructing your scholarship application. Everything you put in your application should be designed to highlight your strengths, including the materials written by someone else. For example, if you need a letter of recommendation, ask someone who knows you well and can speak to your strengths, rather than someone with an impressive title or a friendly attitude that may not be able to go into the level of detail that scholarship providers would like to see.

A large part of your time and energy when applying for scholarships will be devoted to writing scholarship essays. Many scholarship applications require at least one essay and a large number of scholarship reviewers will rely heavily on the essay in choosing a scholarship winner. There are things you can do to write effective scholarship essays that save you time and highlight your strengths as an applicant. By learning about your audience and what they want (one way to do this is by reading about the scholarship contest's mission and reading previous years' winning essays), you can better tailor your scholarship application to their needs. This will immediately set you apart from the students who didn't bother to figure out exactly where they were submitting their scholarship application. And before submitting your essay, have someone proofread it and offer suggestions for improvement.

The most useful, and often overlooked, scholarship application strategy is paying attention to details. From making note of scholarship application deadlines to getting organized to formatting essays, paying attention to details can make the difference between winning a scholarship and finding your essay at the top of the reject pile. Be sure to always follow the rules, no matter how tiny or arbitrary, and to observe appropriate scholarship application etiquette. Taking these steps will ensure that it's the substance of your scholarship application that stands out, not the errors in its presentation.³

Some Helpful Scholarship Tips

- Contact the colleges for scholarship information and applications if they are not included in the student application for admission packet.
- Ask your teachers about scholarship opportunities in their area of expertise such as music, art, or writing.
- Watch the newspapers for scholarship announcements and scholarships sponsored by groups in the community.
- Have your parents ask their employers if any company-sponsored scholarships are available for employees' children.
- Often, colleges combine their application for admission with their scholarship applications. You may be asked to answer essay questions for scholarship consideration. Take your time and do your best on these essay questions.
- WATCH THE DEADLINES!
- Avoid mistakes on scholarship essays and applications. Always spell-check, proofread, and allow one other person to proofread your scholarship applications and essay for errors. Your English teachers are good resources for this step.
- Apply for scholarships that may be local or those for small amounts. Even small scholarships can add up.
- Use multiple resources for scholarship information. Many scholarships offered in the free scholarship searches online are nationally known and are harder to win due to greater competition. Local and regional scholarships are not found as easily through an online search, although they may be easier to win because the applicant pool is smaller. You have to use a combination of resources to find as many scholarships to apply for as possible.
- In most cases scholarship decisions are based on a variety of criteria. These are a few of the most often used:
 - Grade point average
 - Percentile rank
 - Class Rank
 - ACT or SAT test score
 - Extracurricular activities
 - Community Service
 - Leadership
 - Letters of recommendation
 - Interviews
 - Personal statement or essay
 - Financial need
